Subject: Plumeria Plants & Their Inflorescences....
To: Doc <clealii@gmail.com>

Welcome All Plumeria & Tropical Plant Lovers,

I would like to discuss the term inflorescence and inflorescences on plumeria plants today.

An inflorescence can be defined as a cluster of flowers which are arranged on a stem.

This stem can be composed of one main branch or it can be a main branch with side branches as you can see on the picture below. The picture shows one plumeria inflorescence consisting of a main branch and several side branches.

Plumeria plants produce their inflorescences at the end of their branches.

After the "inflo", short for inflorescence, has started to develop, new branches start to form at the base of the inflo (see picture below).

The pointed reddish tip protrusions from the base below the inflo are the new branches. Anywhere from two to seven or more side branches can be produced. This is the regular cycle for plumeria plants.

It should be noted that plumeria plants can produce an inflo and have continued growth without branching. That is why plumeria plants are so exciting to grow because each plant has its own unique growth cycle.

Later in the growth cycle the very same plumeria plant produces another inflo and starts the branching process.

The side branches are symmetrical and produce well balanced plants.

The following picture shows another developing inflo. This time you can see the developing branches at the base of the inflo.

When it comes to plumeria cuttings that produce inflos, it should be noted that all the energy of the cutting goes into the development of the inflo.

Any roots being formed at the same time will suffer due to the lack of available energy, which has all been redirected to the inflo. In this case, one needs to remove the inflo in order to save the cutting so all the energy will be redirected to the development of the root system.

Last Fall, a friend of mine, Mimi Palmer, who is passionate about growing tropical plants, applied a new rooting method to plumerias with phenomenal results. This rooting method is called the Egg Method

This was the very first time this rooting method was applied to plumerias after having heard success stories with other plants and vegetables.

When I gave this rooting method a try, I was amazed and mesmerized by the phenomenal results now with my own plumerias right here in zone 5 before my very own eyes.

Not only did my plumeria cuttings form roots in record time....even over the fall and winter months when plumerias are believed to go into dormancy, but much to my surprise based on what is written above.... they produced inflos and roots at the same time!

This new rooting method, through my experience, supplies the needed energy directly to the developing root system to form strong and healthy roots while allowing the cutting to grow the inflo at the same time.

The following picture is of one cutting of Plumeria 'Celadine'.

This cutting was planted on March 19, 2011 and produced its inflo and roots AT THE SAME TIME when the Egg Method was applied.

The picture below was taken on April 30, 2011. It took exactly 6 weeks to the day for the cutting to root fully and develop its inflo with its first opening flower.

For more information on the Egg Method visit Plumeria Care.

Happy Growing to all my Gardening Friends,

Bob Walsh

Cleal,

I don't have Ken email correct! Maybe you could send for me <3

Love, Lisa

Hi. This is the qmail-send program at yahoo.com.
I'm afraid I wasn't able to deliver your message to the following addresses.

Hi Ken,

Nice "meeting" you the other night...you two were really funny! Being the opportunist that I am, I'm sending you photos that my son never had time to "edit". Maybe you could have some fun with them.

The fotos are a year old and I look much different now, 20 lbs lighter, etc. Just Saying, hahaha!

Look forward to hearing back from you soon,
